Improve Your Memory

Remember the Number 7

As you try to store information in your short-term memory, consider that scientists have concluded that our brains can store approximately seven things in our short-term memory. Trying to remember a list of twelve things to purchase at a store will be a challenge.

"At the age of 82, my aunt needs a greater amount of external stimulation and social activities that will assist her in being more mentally alert and functional. I'm grateful that the Wright's Center provides a greater variety of social and mental stimulation for my aunt. Her participation in the program is a great benefit to her well-being and a great help to me."

Happenings at the Center

Creativity—arts and crafts give participants a sense of worth and contribution

As we age, cognitive and physical exercises are imperative not only to our health, but to our overall life expectancy. Creating things engage the elderly both cognitively and psychologically. Cognitively, they are utilizing a part of their brain that they probably wouldn't ordinarily use.

According to findings in a Journal of the American Medical Association study, exercising the brain is as important to keeping the brain alert and strong as physical exercise is important to keeping the body strong and able.

Psychologically, the benefits of creating things is fulfilling and gives people a sense of worth and contribution; as we age, having a negative outlook can cause mental and physical deterioration; creating gives people a more positive outlook on life.

Wright's Center participants are currently using their sewing skills to create a quilt. The creation of necklaces and bracelets along with Thinking of You cards for participants who are ill, are creative activities designed to stimulate the minds of participants.

A Caregiver's Testimony

The success of The Wright's Center is evident in the successful relationships we have with our participants and their caregivers

Dear Wright's Center,

My name is Mary Valentine. My mother, Lendora Earley currently attends The Wright's Center. My mother looks forward to coming every day. Every day I pick her up she is smiling and ready to talk about her day. My mother went to stay with my sister in Elizabeth City for a week. By Wednesday, my sister called and said "I think it is time for mom to come home because she is constantly talking about the Center."

I am so grateful that her doctor recommended The Wright's Center. My mother loves it there.

The power and necessity of adult day services

Family caregivers show an increase in the beneficial stress hormone DHEA-S on days when they use an adult day care service for their relatives with dementia, according to researchers at Penn State and the University of Texas at Austin. DHEA-S controls the harmful effects of cortisol and is associated with better long-term health.

"This is one of the first studies to show that DHEA-S can be modified by an intervention which in our case, was the use of an adult day care service," said Steven Zarit, Distinguished Professor of Human Development and Family Studies at Penn State. "The study is also one of the first to demonstrate that interventions to lower stress on caregivers, such as the use of adult day care services, have an effect on the body's biological responses to stress. We know that caregivers are at increased risk of illness, because of the long hours of care they provide and the high levels of stress. These findings suggest that use of adult day care services may protect caregivers against the harmful effects of stress associated with giving care to someone with dementia."

The researchers studied 151 caregivers of family members with dementia who attend an adult day care service at least two days a week.
